An interdepartmental major must consist of a minimum of fourteen courses, split evenly between the two departments (e.g. seven course credits in each).

- At least ten of the courses must be at the 200-level or above.
- At least four of the seven courses required by each department must be taught within the department, as opposed to other departments at Duke (e.g., Sociol or Sta).
- No more than two of the fourteen courses may be taken away, abroad, or at home during the summer. (However, please note that courses taken through “Duke in” programs count like regular courses at Duke.)
- All courses must be among those normally accepted for a major in the two departments.
